Are You Mobile Secure?

While mobile banking is becoming more popular, we also need to be mindful that mobile security is the No. 1 issue in the list of top computer security threats for 2012, according to McAfee Labs and Credit Union National Association (CUNA).

Cyber criminals are hacking into all sorts of devices, breaking into everything from cell phones to car systems, and security risks are intensifying and becoming more malicious, said Adam Wosotowsky, senior anti-spam analyst with McAfee.

The No. 1 security threat is mobile threats that bypass personal computers, said McAfee. Attackers will launch mobile banking attacks, and consumers may start to see Trojan banking attacks such as SpyEye and Zeus spread to the smartphone. To insure this doesn't happen, here are a few tips:

• Don't click on unsolicited links or download software from sources whose origins aren't clear.

• Use only apps from the credit union or bank, not third-party apps.

• Don't store important personal information on your smartphone.

• Don't mix money, work and fun. Smartphones shouldn't be used for both visiting financial sites and visiting sites to download games. Often sites offering free games or other services contain viruses that harvest personal or financial information from a smartphone.

• Use strong passwords and change them often. Select passwords that are comprised of at least eight random characters including capital letters, lower-case letters, numbers and special characters.
